

Basic Electric Circuits
Module 01
Basic Circuit Elements and Waveforms
Lecture-03
Circuit Elements Part-1
By
Professor Ankush Sharma
Department Electrical Engineering
Indian Institute of Technology, Kanpur

(Refer Slide Time: 00:39)

The slide is titled "RESISTANCE AND CONDUCTANCE". Under the heading "RESISTANCE", there are three bullet points:

- A physical property or ability of an element to resist the current, is known as resistance and is represented by the symbol R , and is measured in ohms.
- The resistance of any material with a uniform cross-sectional area A depends on A and its length.
- It is expressed mathematically as,

$R = \rho l / A$

where, ρ is known as the resistivity of the material in ohm-meters.

- The common circuit symbol used for a resistor is as shown in the figure below:

The figure shows a circuit symbol for a resistor, which is a zigzag line between two horizontal lines. To the right of the text, there is a hand-drawn diagram of a cylindrical resistor with length l and cross-sectional area A .

Namaskar, so today we will discuss about the various circuit elements in this lecture. Basically, the major passive elements in our electrical circuits are resistor, capacitor, and inductor. So, today we will discuss the various properties of resistors, capacitors, and inductors. Let us start with the first element called resistor. So, let see what see what is resistance? Resistance is a physical property or ability of an element to resist the current. So, basically whenever the current flows in a particular element it tries to oppose the flow of current. So, that property of the element is called resistance.

Now, how you will represent this resistance? The symbol is R . So, generally you will see that in the literature, the symbol R is most commonly used for the resistance and it is measured in ohms. Resistance of any material is dependent on the area as well as length of the element. So, basically if you see cross section of a particular element of area A and length l , the resistance of that particular element is given by $R = \rho l / A$. It means ρ would be the resistivity of the material which is represented in ohm meters, the length of the element, and cross-sectional area of that element. So, these two are the properties of that element which together with the resistivity of the material will define what is the value of resistances of that element. So, in common circuit elements, resistance is one of the most common and you will see that in the various literature and books, you will see this kind of figure represented for the resistance.

(Refer Slide Time: 02:38)

The slide is titled "RESISTANCE (CONT. ...)" in green. It contains a bulleted list of information about Georg Simon Ohm and Ohm's law. The text is as follows:

- Georg Simon Ohm (1787–1854), a German physicist, developed the relationship between current and voltage for a resistor.
- This relationship is known as Ohm's law.
- Ohm's law states that the voltage v across a resistor is directly proportional to the current i flowing through the resistor.
- Ohm defined the constant of proportionality for a resistor to be the resistance, R .
- From the above equation,

Handwritten red notes on the slide include:

- Next to the third bullet: $v \propto i$
- Next to the fourth bullet: $v = R \cdot i$
- Below the fourth bullet, in a green box: $v = iR$
- Below the fifth bullet, in a green box: $R = \frac{v}{i} \Rightarrow 1\Omega = 1 \frac{V}{A}$

How did the resistance property come into the literature? George Simon Ohm was the German physicist who developed the relationship between current and voltage for a resistor. This relationship is called as Ohms law, which was given by the German physicist. Now, what does Ohm's law say? Ohm's law says that, the voltage V across a particular resistor is directly proportional to the current I , which is flowing through that resistor. So, you can simply represent that V is directly proportional to current I .

Now, Ohm define one constant, which is called proportionality constant for this particular equation and that was represented by R and from there the equation came $V = iR$. So, this proportionality constant was the resistance of that element through which the current is flowing. So, now from the above equation you can simply say that resistance R is nothing but, voltage V divided by current. So, for 1 Ohm, what you will say? You will say 1 Ohm is nothing but 1 Volt per Ampere.